

Business Performance & Project Management Summit

At the above event (24 April 2007) delegates were asked to answer the following question and put their answers onto a post it note.

What is project management like in your organisation?

The responses are given below unedited (as far as possible).

Effective but a bit chaotic	Good intentioned	Tired and emotional
Positive at strategic level	"Evolving" Most parts have an understanding of and agree to principles	Patchy across the organisation! Some areas "average" Other "poor"
Appropriate to the needs of the business (and projects) and more often than not, pragmatic	Evolving Being sold to business leaders	Underestimated
Enables to Deliver Promises so long as it doesn't stop us doing what we want to do	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Underestimated • Always challenging to deliver to time • Every day is different 	Immature
In its infancy – starting to explore what it is- can do. - developing awareness of process and methodologies	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Process driven • Very busy • Exciting 	Bureaucratic Data gathering
Good but not applied as widely as it should be	Focused on delivery on time not on benefits	Immature, lack of understanding, committed, lack of training
